

Jillian Corn

Soprano

JILLIAN CORN is a sophomore at Westminster Choir College studying music education. She began studying music at a very early age. While in kindergarten, she began taking piano lessons with her incredible (now former) teacher Kathy Toth, and in first grade she began studying voice with Pat Weitz. When she was in third grade, she became a member of the Princeton Girlchoir. Because of the Princeton Girlchoir, Jillian has performed at famous venues like Carnegie Hall and all over the world in places like Vienna, Trinidad, and Hawaii. When she entered sophomore year of high school, Jillian began studying voice with Nancy Hoerl, a professor at the Westminster Conservatory. Mrs. Hoerl helped Jillian “find her voice,” and she is so thankful to have worked with her during the last three years of her high school career.

Jillian would also like to thank Lynnel Jenkins, without whom she would not have found the light at the end of the long tunnel. Jillian thanks her mother, father and brother for their endless support and love, but most importantly, Jillian would like to thank her Nan for always reminding her that her education is most important and that she sounds beautiful even on her worst days.